London based acoustic-indie trio Narrow Plains are set to release their latest single 'I Should've Known' for the 15th of January 2016. This follows a string of recent awards and accolades amassed by the group, including being crowned winners for the internationally hotly regarded 'Hard Rock Rising 2015' awards which took place at the iconic Hard Rock Cafe London, being 'Finalist' in UpriseFM's 'Live In Your City', as well as winning a recording with the highly acclaimed John Davenport (John Lennon, Rolling Stones, Bruce Springsteen) at Deep River Studios in North Carolina; producing the phenomenal 'Choices' which very recently reached number one in the Reverbnation indie charts.

'I Should've Known' follows the success of Narrow Plains previous single, 'So Rewind' which ended up being hand-picked by the BBC as 'Record Of The Day' earlier last year. 'I Should've Known' runs on a strong blues/rock influence, as brothers; Roger Connick (bass) and Stuart Connick (drums) lay down a tireless and hypnotic rhythm, allowing vocalist and frontman Charlie Ferriday to really push his distinctive vocals over the persistence of his ruthless guitar playing.

Narrow Plains continue to succeed in whatever comes their way. With their much anticipated self-titled album just round the corner set for release on the 14th of February and a prior release show on the 22nd of January at the O2 Academy Islington, Narrow Plains is one to watch for 2016, as they storm the music industry with an attitude that just won't stop.

Keep your eyes open as Narrow Plains are set to make a stir in 2016.
